Overview

Cable Car in Nepal has flourished over the years around Nepal's various hill destinations, mainly for domestic and international visitors including the pilgrims for worship and prayers. The first cable car in Nepal was established three decades ago, offering a scenic ride to the holy Manakamana Temple. The car was established to cater to the needs mainly of Hindu followers to pay homage to Goddess Manakamana.

The manifestation of the ferocious goddess Kali, where local Hindus, and from all over India visit for worship. It is the longest cable car ride in Nepal at present that can be a scenic ride leads across the Trisuli River. A popular river for rafting, for a day or more, apart from a religious tour, the area offers beautiful views of landscapes.

In distant, you can see the snow peaks of Manaslu, Ganesh Himal, and Annapurna Himalayas. Similarly, the most popular Nepal cable car, at present is the Chandragiri Cable Car, which is a short joy ride due to its proximity to Kathmandu and for the glorious panorama of the Himalayan chain of peaks. The Chandragiri Cable Car is famous for pilgrims and Hindu followers paying homage to Chandragiri Temple.

Chandragiri is 2,551m or 8,370 feet high, with an amusement park including international-class restaurants and hotels, as well as for the people to enjoy short hiking around the higher viewpoints. In the early days, the Cable Car in Nepal was known as a Ropeway used for transportation of goods from all over Nepal and India to reach the Kathmandu Valley and city but at present it is in a rundown condition. It had been stopped since the motorable road and major highway reached Kathmandu and all over Nepal.

Manakamana and Chandragiri Cable Car in Nepal are the most popular destinations for cable car rides. Besides, there are a few others, the Lumbini Cable Car, which connects the city of Butwal to the lowlands which is located around the southern west of the Terai belt which operates from Butwal to Basantapur hill town. The other popular at present is the Annapurna Cable Car which is located in a scenic tourist city Pokhara.

There are more Cable Cars in the pipeline, as Cable Cars or Ropeway is the fastest means of traveling in Nepal, around the high hills and mountainous region of Nepal, within the world's highest peaks.
